He's ambushed by singers of the city's legendary trallalero and learns to whip up a mean pesto Genovese. Then he takes the train as it clings to the cliffs along the Riviera Di Levante to reach the picturesque and remote villages of the Cinque Terre. To cap off his journey, he travels to the Austrian border and the famous Brenner Pass, mastered by the railways in the 19th century and the scene today of a ground-breaking engineering project to build one of the world's longest rail tunnels. Helena wants to stay out of the headlines at a time where she finally has earned respect as a coach, but her position is fragile, and a story like this could turn everything on its head. When Camilla is disappointed in Helena's lack of action and Michael positions himself for the coaching job in Helena's absence, Helena is forced to go public with her accusations and have the ban retracted.
