Since the days of the Pharaohs, it has linked Egypt to Sudan. Nouri Gomaa, the chief of the Bisharin tribe, lives in Aswan in Egypt, where he is a camel dealer. But for many years he made his living by leading caravans from the camel markets of Omdurman and El Obeid in Sudan across the desert into Egypt. He is now an old man and has retired from leading caravans. But he still hears the call of the desert, and he decides to make one last trip – partly because the improvement of the roads in Sudan means that the age of camel caravans is coming to an end. In future, goods and the camels themselves are likely to be transported by truck. (From France, in Arabic) (Documentary) G CC **Premiere****

- 2:00 am Living With The Amish - This week the British teenagers stay with the Burkholder family - members of a plain order called Horse and Buggy Mennonites. Back in the 1600s, the Amish split from the Mennonites to pursue a more austere way of life. Although the Mennonites modernised slightly, they share the Amish belief that a simple, Godly life is the key to contentment. As the boys work on the family-run melon farm, the girls are invited to party at a weekly scrapbook frolic. But the fun doesn't stop there, Saturday night is youth group and it's the place to play volleyball and sing Christian songs. (From the UK) (Documentary Series) (Part 4 of 6) (Rpt) PG CC
- 2:55 am Living With The Amish - Horses are essential to Amish life. In this episode the teenagers stay with two Amish families in Pennsylvania who still work their farms using horsepower. The teens visit a traditional Amish horse auction, and put in long, back-breaking hours helping with the harvest. The woman of the house, Becky, teaches Charlotte and Hannah about the advantages of staying pure until married, while Siana faces difficult questions about the lack of religion in her life, and learns something about the nature of forgiveness.
