2021-01-06	1415	History	First Civilisations	Religion	01	2	Religion has always been the soulmate of civilisation - they are meant for each other. This connection was first made in Ancient Egypt, which is still the longest lasting civilisation in world history. All civilisations since have borrowed something of the blueprint established by the Egyptians. Remarkably, it is possible to trace the birth of organised religion to a specific site known as Nabta Playa in the Egyptian desert. Here, 8,000 years ago, herders built stone circles and erected megaliths as a place of worship. Archaeologist and series consultant, Jeff Rose believes the site was a prototype church where people tried to understand their place within the ever-changing rhythms of the natural world. 2021-01-07	1355	History	First Civilisations		Cities		01	3	Having lived as mobile foragers for 99% of our time on Earth, why did our ancestors stop moving and start settling in villages, towns and cities? The process started in the hills of southern Turkey at a site known as Gobekli Tepe. The impulse to be social brought large numbers of people together for seasonal feasts. The site was so important to them they marked it out with huge carved pillars - the world's first monument. But to stay on a permanent basis they needed a permanent supply of food. Archaeologist Jens Notroff explains the solution came around 10,000 years ago, when people in this region worked out how to plant, cultivate and harvest wheat. In so doing, they changed the trajectory of human history. Tied to the land, farmers needed to live in one place on a year-round basis - the village was born.
