Part of the team head to the tangled jungles of northern Burma, one of the largest swathes of unbroken forest in Southeast Asia, while wildlife cameraman Gordon Buchanan heads to the only other place in Burma where tigers may still exist, the far south. The forests of Karen State were once home to a thriving population of tigers, but this region has been isolated by war for over sixty years and little is known about the fate of the animals. The team must overcome intense physical hardship and tough field conditions to find the evidence they need to help preserve this unique and largely untouched wilderness. What they discover could change the future of Burma's forests forever. (Part 3 of 3) (From the UK) (Documentary) G CC **Final****
